

It is important to let life shine for those in the beginning of their life, for those with disabilities, and for those at the end of their life.

Letting life shine from the very moment of conception is important. Even though the baby is in the womb, it is a precious light that can be a joy to so many people. Suppose a mother is nervous about her pregnancy, and might not be able to afford or raise her upcoming baby. We can help her baby shine by giving the mother the help and support she needs. Donating baby supplies to pregnancy centers, or helping the mom find loving parents to foster or adopt her baby are great options. By allowing the mom to see her baby through an ultrasound, it can help her better see how valuable her child's life actually is. From the very moment of conception, it is important to let the life of an unborn baby shine.

In addition to the unborn, it is also important to let the lives of disabled people shine. Jeremiah 1:5 says, " Before I formed you in the womb I knew you, before you were born I set you apart: I appointed you as a prophet to the nations." Even though in some ways they may be limited to things we can do on a daily basis, those who are differently-abled are still special and valuable in the eyes of the Lord and have a purpose. Finding volunteering opportunities, raising or donating money, and possibly helping them, are some of the amazing ways we can allow the life of disabled people shine. Even giving a friendly smile could go a long way. Letting the life of disabled people shine is very important.

It is very important to let life shine, including those at the very end of their life. While it may seem reasonable to end the life of somebody suffering, deciding when someone's life ends is not our job, but is up to God. Instead, we can try our best by making the elderly as comfortable as possible. Visiting the elderly may bring them peace, comfort, or joy as well. Even though they may be at the end of their life, their life is just as valuable, so let it shine

It is important to let the lives of all people shine starting from conception to natural death.
